

Durex / Cannes / Lights Out “Diver”

Dir. Crobin

An older, wholesome, proper, rather boring, Chinese couple lies in bed at night, both wearing conservative pajamas, reading their respective books.

Suddenly, the husband stops reading, rests his book on his chest, reflects for a moment, leans over to his wife and casually whispers something into her ear. She too, stops, reflects for a moment, with no change in her emotion, closes her book and places it on her bedside table. The man follows suit by placing his book on his bedside table before leaving the bed and walking out of frame.

The woman patiently waits for her husband to retrain to the bed. Suddenly, the man enters back into frame, wearing a skimpy, black, thong bathing suit, a snorkel and a pair of flippers. In his hand is a Durex multifunction bullet vibrator.

The woman, still expressionless, unbuttons the top button of her pajama shirt, tightly graps the bed sheets and braces herself. The man proceeds to nonchalantly twist the vibrator to its ON position, activating the vibrations. Off camera, we hear a burst of liquid. We cut back to the woman - she's out of breath and soaking wet - dripping from head to toe. With the vibrator in hand, the man approaches the bed, the wet carpet squishing beneath his flippers with each step. As he crawls up the bed towards his wife, the woman claps twice, which turns out the lights.

Darkness.

We hear the sound of the vibrations continue, along with some frisky, playful noises and mutters from the happy couple.

Super: Great sex starts with a whisper.

Super: Love sex, Durex

Note: This couple has a very dry, mild-mannered disposition. The reason this idea works so well is because what appears to be a couple who is doing something outside of their comfort zone, is actually two people who share and an emotional and physical connection. They take things to the extreme in order to offset their seemingly strait-laced lives. The overall tone is strictly humorous and teeters between the explicit and prudish sense of things.

